The beloved children's book The Story of Ferdinand was first published more than 80 years ago. Now it's been made into an animated film, Ferdinand. The movie hits theaters on December 15. It tells the story of a kind and gentle Spanish bull who, because of his size, is mistaken for a beast. Ferdinand is taken from his home and made to fight for sport. The bull then plans a return to his peaceful roots.

Professional wrestler and actor John Cena voices Ferdinand. Like his character, Cena is sometimes judged by his appearance. "A lot of people think I want to cause trouble because of the way I look," Cena says. "But deep down, I'm a very nice person who just looks a certain way."

The movie is part comedy, part drama. Above all, it delivers an important message: "Never be afraid to be who you are," Cena says. "That's what makes you so special. That's what makes you accomplish great things."

Gravity Assist

When Jack Davis, 9, looks up at the night sky, he doesn't see just stars. He sees his future. The fourth grader lives in New Jersey. He has a deep interest in outer space. Jack has fueled that interest by watching science-fiction movies.

In July, Jack heard that NASA was looking for a new planetary protection officer. He decided that he was the right person for the job. The officer works to prevent astronauts from accidentally bringing microscopic alien life-forms back to Earth. The officer also makes sure astronauts do not take Earth-based germs with them into space.

Jack wrote a letter to NASA. He noted his qualifications for the job. "My sister says I am an alien," Jack wrote. He signed the letter "Jack Davis, Guardian of the Galaxy."

Jack got a letter from James L. Green. Green works at NASA. "We are always looking for bright future scientists and engineers to help us," he wrote. "I hope you will study hard and do well in school. We hope to see you here at NASA one of these days!" Jack was "shocked" when Green's response arrived. "I shouted, 'I got a letter from NASA!'", Jack says.

Green calls his response a "gravity assist." A spacecraft can use the gravity of a planet or moon for a boost in a new direction. Likewise, Green hopes that by answering letters from kids he can help influence their path in life. "If I can provide that first gravity assist that gets them going, then we've got more kids coming our way and wanting to work with us," he says.

Jack won't be working at NASA yet. But he has been named kid science adviser at the new planetarium at Liberty Science Center (LSC). It is in New Jersey.

Paul Hoffman, LSC's president, heard about Jack's letter to NASA. Hoffman posted a video invitation to Jack on YouTube. "You can work right here," Hoffman said. Jack will make sure planetarium exhibits are fun for kids.

Jack says he already knows what he wants to see at LSC: "More hands-on stuff. Kids like to touch things."
